Dear Mr. Cicconi,

Enclosed is a list of our books, with prices.

When you speak to groups you have a real problem: are the sources on which you'll draw dependable?

Most of the books pursue conspiracy theories and are not factual.

Do you want to mislead your audiences?

I think not.

So I encourage you to discinguish between proper criticism of the government and its agencies for failing to do what the nation expected of them and the various theories that seek to or profess to have solved the crime - and haven't.

It is simply awful that the government imposed on the peoples' trust.

But those of us who disagree with the government ought not do what the government did.

We should, I think we must, distinguish between fact and theories.

Best wishes,

Harold Weisberg
